A great way to fit it in is to use the walk to and from work. What I learned from this that we don't know what we don't know. Last month I posted about doing the NICU training for my mentor, Laura. It was eye opening and I found it was also really humbling. The nurses that helped me in the NICU were incredibly open and willing to share with me. They gave me ideas that I never knew existed, they told me that I could completely understand what they were going through without ever being in that position, and they answered all of my questions, patiently. They realized that I was listening and really thinking about what they were saying and that was amazing. While it was a great experience, I was pretty sure that my next training would be the last one, that this was something that we'd do once and never do again. But then one of the other NICU nurses asked me to be on the trainign team with her for the next NICU training session. When I realized that this was something that would happen every year that I was still in that position, I realized that I did not know what I didn't know. I also realized that I needed to be sure I 50b96ab0b6

Ruptured intracranial aneurysms (rICA) are associated with high morbidity and mortality. Although the neuroendovascular approach (NEA) is often used for rICA, there are limited data available on the procedural safety and feasibility of elective NEA for rICA. In this study, our aim is to evaluate the outcomes and safety of NEA for rICA as compared with those in patients with unruptured aneurysms. We retrospectively reviewed the medical records of patients who had undergone NEA for rICA and compared them with a patient cohort who had undergone NEA for unruptured aneurysms. Univariate analysis was performed to determine the prognostic factors that were associated with the perioperative stroke rate (PRS). There were 804 patients (916 aneurysms) included in the study. Among the 804 patients, 343 (205 rICA, 138 unruptured aneurysms) underwent NEA. For patients who had ruptured aneurysms, 54.3% were female, and the average age was 62.0 years. Average aneurysm size was 14.6 mm for ruptured aneurysms. The overall PRS was 0.7% (2/343). The PRS for patients who had ruptured aneurysms was 0.8% (1/121) and that for unrupt
